The Modern Mother.

cess and what is known by getting on, condones all kinds of moral obliquity for the sake of financial prosperity and social position, do we find that, as a rule, mothpoverty the cause of exclusion, virtue and not success the title to reception—there would be some check to the corruption which is so insolently rampant now. Women have this power in their own hands, more especially those women who are mothers. If they would only set themselves to check the inclination for loose talk and doubtful discussions which is characteristic of the present moment. did not scruple to use when

One of the functions recognispically belonging to them was that aring their young people from the people with the people with the people with the people with a modern grant of the people of sires, which, if left to themselves, bring only evil and disaster, but which guarded and directed may be turned to the best of ends. For ourselves, we deeply regret to see the rapid extinction of motherhood in its best sense, and decline to accept the modern loose-handed chapperon as its worthy substitute. We repudiate the plea of insubordination of the young so often put forward in defense of the new state of things, for it is simply nonsense. The young are what mothers make them, just as society is, what the matrons allow it to be; and if mothers did their duty, we should hear no more of the willfulness of the one or the shameless vagaries of the other. The remety for each lies in their own hands only. rs know as well as she does that ence is a blind rather than a pro-They are with mamma as a form a, but they are left to themselves ther of fact. A Solid Dinner.— Some of the New York hotels have bills of fare with the fly leaf covered with cards of various business houses. An Oregon man recently took a seat behind one of them, when a waiter appeared with "What will you have, sir?" To the utter confusion of the waiter, he leisurely remarked.—You may fetch me a new set of teeth, in gutta per-cha: a Florence sewing machine, with and without more ado. If license is more desired than modesty, and liberty better than reticence, the girls may as well be left, as practically they are already free from the mother's guardianship; but we have a doubt that way, we may as well give it the benefit of consideration and think a little on the subject before going further on the present line.

From the first the mother, in the well-to-do classes, acts too much the part of the hen ostrich with her eyes. She trusts to the kindly influence of external circumstances rather than to her own care on make the hatching successful. Nurses, governesses, schools, in turn relieve her of the irksome duties of maternity. She sees her little ones at their stated hour, and for the other twenty-three leaves them to receive their first indelible impress from a class which she is never fired of disparaging.
